

To Whom It May Concern:

The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy Law protections. I am due to be on the "do not call list" at the beginning of next year (2003), but from what I hear, the benefits of being on this list is very beneficial to the consumer. I want protection against telemarketers. I do not want the Indiana Telephone Privacy Laws to be changed. The only way I would want those laws to be changed would be to further protect me, my family, and my privacy. My privacy is extremely important to me. I do not want to be bothered by telemarketers; I do not care who they are, or what they are selling, I am not interested. On a weekly basis I have automated or pre-recorded messages from telemarketers on my voice mail at least 5 days out of the week. The way my voice mail is set up, I have to listen to the entire message before I can delete the message. It is a complete waste of my time to deal with those kind of messages, and to my understanding the way the laws are set up now, I will not have to deal with those messages after I get on the "do not call list". I want the Indiana Telephone Privacy Law left alone.

Sincerely,

Jasmine Adkins
